

Webster, Chamberlain & Bean is the leading law firm in the United States specializing exclusively in providing a full range of legal services to non-profit organizations. Since 1970, Webster, Chamberlain & Bean has provided legal services to a broad range of trade associations, professional societies, public charities, private foundations, scientific organizations, clubs, schools and civic groups, lobbying groups, and political committees and candidates.

The firm provides its clients with corporate, litigation, antitrust, tax, employment, trademark, copyright, regulatory, government relations, and general legal advice.

Since all of the firm's attorneys work with non-profit organizations on a daily basis, we believe we have the largest practice of its kind. We also believe that this breadth and depth of experience allows us to more effectively and efficiently represent associations and non-profit organizations than other firms. At the same time, as a relatively small firm with one location, we avoid the overhead burden and bureaucracy of large firms that often can translate into higher fees and less attention and responsiveness.
